This study assesses the techno-economic potential of selected demand-side efficient appliances to mitigate CO₂ emission from the power sector in Thailand under national, consumer, and utility perspectives. A key finding of this study is that about 5.5 – 7% of the total annual CO₂ emission from the electricity sector of the country can be reduced during 1996–2011 from the national perspective.