INVESTIGATION OF AWARENESS OF ORAL COMMUNICATION SKILLS THROUGH SELF-ASSESSMENT

Author: Kulawadee Yamkate

This paper is based on a research conducted with a group of undergraduate students in an oral communication course. The research aims to find out whether the students can be trained to assess their own performance while conducting a role-play (which is a part of the course assessment). The data will be collected from the students’ diary reflecting on their good or weak points in the role-play. The researcher is also interested to study the depth of their judgement. It is expected that the findings can reveal a guideline for training the students to assess their own oral communication skills.
